Soviets in the UN System, 1984

25X1

Soviet participation in international organizations has grown from membership in a few technical bodies in the 1920s to active involvement in nearly the full range of international organizations today. In 1983, because of a lack of up-to-date information about the nature and extent of Moscow's involvement in multi-lateral forums, we decided to prepare and update annually a Reference Aid that provides basic data on:

- Soviet membership in international organizations.
- Soviet and East European staffing of the United Nations and related agencies.
- Permanent missions to the United Nations.
- Open literature sources on Soviet participation in international organizations.
- Alphabetical listing of Soviet and East European Staff.

History of Soviet Participation

Soviet participation in international organizations spans six decades. In the mid-1920s the USSR joined the Universal Postal Union (UPU) and the International Telecommunications Union (ITU). Soviet interest in technical and scientific organizations continued through the postwar years when Moscow joined the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Along with providing key international services in such fields as communications and transportation, organizations of this type have given the Soviet Union access to a wide range of economic, technical, and regional information.

Participation in technical bodies, however, did little to ease initial Soviet wariness of the more political-oriented international organizations. For example, according to academic literature, the Soviets condemned the League of Nations as an instrument of imperialist powers from its founding in 1920 until 1934, when they joined the League in an effort to gain allies against expansionist Germany and Japan. The League, however, did not provide the support Moscow wanted. In 1939 Moscow signed a nonaggression pact with the Third Reich and invaded Finland, for which it was expelled from the organization.

Soviet involvement in international political organizations shifted markedly after World War II. The Soviet Union played a major role in the founding of the United Nations in 1945 and immediately became an active participant on the Security Council. Since then Moscow has continued its high level of involvement in Security Council affairs except for the peace-keeping operations, which it has rarely supported.

Moscow's involvement in the UN General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) has also changed over the course of time. The Soviet Union initially adopted a low profile and defensive posture in these bodies. However, as the West began to lose its working majority in the UN with the arrival of newly independent Third World countries, Soviet involvement in economic and social organizations began to increase substantially. According to academic literature, the change in Soviet response to these organizations was calculated to win the favor of Third World countries as well as to protect Moscow from unwelcome UN initiatives. More specifically, through their active participation in the General Assembly and ECOSOC, the Soviets have been able to:

- Develop contacts in areas of the world where Moscow's influence had been minimal.
- Promote Communist ideology.
- Secure access to information about the needs of individual countries for the purpose of extending bilateral offers of assistance.
- Discredit Western aid programs.
- Protect the Soviet Union from criticism and from Third World demands for aid.

Confidential

Despite their interest in cultivating Third World support, the Soviets are very selective in their participation in multilateral aid organizations. For example, the Soviet Union is not a member of the World Bank Group and provides only minimal contributions to UN aid organizations. According to academic literature, the principal Soviet rationale for not participating in aid-giving organizations is that Third World poverty is the result of Western colonialism and is perpetuated by neocolonialism. The Soviets argue that the USSR is not a colonial power and is therefore not responsible for Third World poverty or obligated to provide aid.

Review of UN conferences and publications indicates that, even though Moscow contributes little development assistance, it takes virtually every opportunity to support Third World demands for additional aid from the West. A recent example is the 1983 UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD VI) held in Belgrade, where the Soviets supported Third World proposals for more aid on easier terms from the World Bank. Moreover, Moscow uses UN organizations and publications to highlight its own aid programs, sometimes using well-placed Soviet staff personnel to write the documents. The UNCTAD staff report (TD/280) in 1983, which served as the UNCTAD VI document on international financial and monetary issues, is a good example of Moscow's use of forum and staff to tout its contributions and attack the West.

The Soviets have a keen interest in joining organizations that exchange information and conduct studies on economic trends. This is reflected in their active involvement in the UN-related economic conferences, commissions, and research organizations, such as the UNCTAD and the Economic Commission for Europe, as well as various organizations and commissions that deal with commodities and resources. Membership in such groups not only provides a source of potentially useful information but also a forum for portraying Communist economic philosophy in its most favorable light and pointing out any perceived inequity in the Western systems. While Moscow is willing to tap into these types of organizations, it avoids organizations such as the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or the International Monetary Fund, where bargaining and reciprocity count for more than polemics.

In addition to the economic and technical arenas, the Soviet Union has been very active in arms control and disarmament forums such as the General Assembly's First Committee and the Conference on Disarmament. By sending large delegations to these disarmament bodies, the Kremlin has been able to introduce arms control initiatives it knows will go nowhere but which portray the Soviet Union as taking the high ground in disarmament discussions. Participation in these bodies also provides the Soviet Union with opportunities to deflect issues away from areas where it is vulnerable and toward areas of perceived Western weakness. For example, in the abortive yellow rain investigation, a Soviet in the UN Secretariat used his influence to sidetrack the investigation.

Overall, Soviet participation in international organizations reflects basic Soviet foreign policy interests. Through their participation in such internationally representative and highly visible political forums as the Security Council, the General Assembly, and ECOSOC, the Soviets can attack their enemies, support their Third World friends, and defend their interests in debate and in staff studies. By being selective in its participation in trade and aid organizations, Moscow can choose those organizations in which it has a direct interest as a producer or consumer and stay away from those that require resource commitments and information it considers sensitive.

Soviet and East European Placement

As Soviet interest in international organizations has increased, Moscow has put more emphasis on placing Soviets on the staffs. During the first 15 years of participation in the UN, Moscow permitted few of its citizens to work on UN staffs. It did, however, attempt to place Soviet personnel in some key positions where they could monitor and attempt to influence UN actions, most notably the Security Council. For example, soon after the UN was founded, a Soviet was appointed Under Secretary General in the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs, an office that the Soviets have continued to dominate.

Confidential

According to academic literature, their influence on the Security Council through this department has nevertheless been effectively neutralized as other members have created alternate staff components to bypass the Soviets.

Since Khrushchev's shoe pounding speech in 1960, the USSR has made a concerted effort to expand its influence in the UN Secretariat by building an organization within the Secretariat capable of influencing the UN and promoting Soviet objectives. Approximately 1,000 Soviet and East European citizens are now employed by the UN, a tenfold increase since 1959. Bloc citizens now work in virtually all parts of the UN system and at every grade level. According to UN experts, the vast majority of Soviet citizens employed by international organizations are officials of the Soviet Government on loan to the organizations. Despite UN rules prohibiting receipt of instructions from the home government, Soviet employees respond directly to orders from Moscow and consider their tour in the Secretariat as an integral part of their careers as Soviet Government employees.

One area of obvious Soviet concentration in the Secretariat is the personnel system itself. For years the Soviets have effectively controlled the UN personnel office in Geneva, and six Soviets work in the New York Office of Personnel Services, including Victor Elisseev, the Director of Policy Coordination. In these positions, it is possible for the Soviets to direct and influence UN hiring and promotion decisions; to help place other Soviets and friendly persons in offices that deal with issues of Soviet interest such as disarmament, the Middle East, and apartheid; and to use their access to UN personnel records and applicants' files in recruiting intelligence assets.

Soviet personnel placement patterns also indicate Moscow's interest in the UN's potential as a propaganda mechanism. In 1984 the staff of the UN Department of Public Information included 35 Bloc citizens, including Anatoly Mkrtchyan, the Director of the External Relations Division. This department is responsible for media relations and maintains 63 information centers around the world that disseminate information about the UN. Employment in the Department provides Soviet staff the opportunity to make valuable contacts among media representatives from many countries and to travel freely as UN officials.

Among the specialized agencies, the Soviets tend to congregate where they have access to sophisticated Western technology. For example, 111 Bloc personnel, including 69 Soviets, are on the staff of the IAEA, which is responsible for drawing up and implementing the safeguards agreements provided for in the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty as well as for developing siting, safety, and reliability standards for nuclear power stations. IAEA staff has access to sensitive nuclear-related information from 110 members. Not only is the Soviet IAEA contingent large, representing 14 percent of all Soviets employed by the Secretariat, but it is also high level, including the IAEA Deputy Director General, Leonard Konstantinov, and three executive-level personnel, Tadeusz Wojcik, Vasilii Ferronsky, and Lev Issaev.

Moscow's low interest in the aid and humanitarian organizations is also a factor in the Soviet staffing pattern. No Soviets or East European nationals work for the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, the Food and Agricultural Organization, International Fund for Agricultural Development, or the World Bank Group. Only four Soviets work for UNICEF and four for the UN Development Program, the two key UN aid agencies.

The Reference Aid

Because of the extent of the Soviet Union's involvement in the UN, this Reference Aid is presented in five parts. The first section lists UN and related organizations in which the Soviet Union does and does not participate. The second section provides a Directory of Soviet and East European staff employed by the UN and related organizations. The staff is listed by component, and the responsibilities of each component are explained briefly. The organizational chart of the UN and related bodies at the end of the Reference Aid is keyed to the text by corresponding number and includes the size of the Soviet contingent and the names of senior Soviet personnel employed in each component. Soviet and East European staffing information was taken from lists published by the UN and related agencies during 1984 and 1985. Descriptions of the stated purpose of each UN component came from UN documents as well as from open literature. The third section lists the permanent missions to the United Nations in Geneva, New York, Paris, Vienna and Nairobi. The fourth section lists alphabetically the Soviet and East European Staff. The fifth section of this Reference Aid includes a bibliography of selected books and periodicals concerning Soviet participation in the UN between 1950 and 1985. The principal finding of our review of this literature is that most systematic studies of Soviet behavior in the UN were done nearly 20 years ago.

Organizations

Confidential*UN Organizations

This section lists UN and related international organizations the Soviet Union has joined as well as those organizations it has not joined.<sup>1</sup> For the purposes of this Reference Aid, international organizations are organizations open to the membership of governments. Organizations, such as the International Olympic Committee, which are at least nominally composed of private citizens, and the European Economic Community, whose membership is restricted by region, are not included.

The lists of organizations are presented in six parts—the five main organs of the UN and the specialized agencies. In addition to listing the organizations, a brief description of their purpose, as stated in charters or other official documents, is provided along with information concerning location, size, and the date the Soviets joined, if applicable.

Confidential*Directory of Soviet and East European Staff

This section provides a list of Soviets and East Europeans employed by the United Nations' Secretariat, whose principal function is to service the other main organs of the United Nations and administer the programs and policies laid down by them. The responsibilities of each component within the Secretariat accompany the staff list and correspond to the chart included in the Reference Aid. A list of Soviets and East Europeans employed by the Secretariats of other organizations in the UN system that the Soviet Union has joined also is included in the Directory and chart. Specialized agencies are quasi-independent bodies within the UN family of organizations.

Secretariat

1. Secretary General

The Secretary General is the chief administrative officer of the United Nations. The appointment is made by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. According to the Charter, the Secretary General must appoint the staff according to regulations established by the General Assembly, which include a regard for the competence and integrity of the individual as an international civil servant and the importance of recruitment on as wide a geographic basis as possible.

In addition to the administrative duties, the Secretary General is called on by the Charter to perform such "other functions" as are entrusted by the Security Council, General Assembly, and other main organs; to bring to the attention of the Security Council "any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security" as well as "make either oral or written statements to the General Assembly concerning any question under consideration by it."

The work of the Secretary General and staff includes formal mediation in resolving international disputes; administering peacekeeping operations, surveys of world economic trends and problems, studies in fields such as human rights and natural resources; organizing international conferences; compiling statistics; gathering information on the extent to which decisions of the Security Council and other bodies are being carried out; interpreting speeches; translating documents; and servicing the world's communications media with information about the United Nations.

The Executive Office of the Secretary General serves as the Secretary General's personal staff. It coordinates and oversees the work of the Secretariat as well as helps the Secretary General influence and execute policy. Traditionally, the Secretary General has turned to this office, rather than the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs, when directing UN peace and security responsibilities.

UN/US Rank and Salary Equivalents

The UN post classifications compare to the following US Civil Service classifications:

Under Secretary General (USG)	SES-6
Assistant Secretary General (ASG)	SES-5
Director (D-2)	SES-1
Director (D-1)	GS-15
Professional Officer (P-5)	GS-14
Professional Officer (P-4)	GS-13
Professional Officer (P-3)	GS-12
Professional Officer (P-2)	GS-11
Professional Officer (P-1)	GS-09
General Service (G-5)	GS-08
General Service (G-4)	GS-07
General Service (G-3)	GS-06
General Service (G-2)	GS-05
General Service (G-1)	GS-04

Although UN rank and salary classifications are roughly equivalent to those in the US Civil Service, UN salaries for particular posts may be 20 to 40 percent higher than their equivalent in the US Civil Service when dependency allowances and differential adjustments for the location of employment are included. UN officials in Vienna and Geneva are, for example, paid more than officials of the same rank in New York. In addition, top UN officials receive allowances for entertainment, housing, and transportation. It should be noted that in addition to the UN positions noted above, there are a small number of P-6 positions held by Bloc personnel. These posts consist exclusively of medical officers, scientists, or special fellows. In this text these personnel were assigned a P-5 ranking for expositional simplicity.

This Committee oversees the work done by the UN Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation and the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. It also reviews the activities of some of the peacekeeping operations.

In the past, the Under Secretaries for Special Political Affairs took charge of such matters as the preparation and operation of the Atoms-for-Peace Conferences and the day-to-day management of the United Nations Emergency Force and operation in the Congo. Their assignments were predominantly political in nature and cut across the competence of several departments.

8. Department of Administration and Management (includes offices of Financial, Personnel, General, and Administrative Management Services as well as the Internal Audit and Electronic Data Processing Divisions)

The Department of Administration and Management assists in the Secretary General's managerial responsibilities and relationships with the Fifth Main Committee of the General Assembly, which deals with administrative, budgetary, and personnel questions. Within the Secretariat, this department oversees the work done by the Offices of Financial, Personnel, General, and Administrative Management Services as well as the Internal Audit and Electronic Data Processing Divisions.

The Office of Financial Services is responsible for formulating and keeping track of the UN budget, the Internal Audit Division for examining and verifying the Secretariat's financial accounts, and the Electronic Data Processing and Information Division for giving computer support and expert technical assistance to the administrative and substantive areas of the Secretariat.

The Office of Personnel Services (OPS) is responsible for the recruitment, placement, and training of the Secretariat's staff, and for the development of personnel policies and staff regulations. Legally, it is only an advisory body between the Secretary General and the substantive departments or offices. However, in cases of new appointments, OPS can interpose a veto unless the Secretary General exercises his authority and acts against its advice. In matters of promotion or assignment, OPS can only advise, warn, or delay—it cannot refuse the opinion of the department concerned. Along with OPS, the Appointments and Promotions Board and Committee also exercises authority in cases of appointments and promotions. The Assistant Secretary General in charge of OPS has come from the Third World since 1974.

The Office of General Services supervises communications services, provides security services, maintains archives, provides transportation and custodial services, and directs purchase and supply functions for UN buildings throughout the world. The Assistant Secretary General in charge of this office has always come from the United States.

The Administrative Management Service (AMS) was created in 1971 to do manpower utilization studies, comprehensive management surveys, and organizational studies as well as to review administrative procedures and to develop techniques to aid the career development of the Secretariat staff.

9. Department of Conference Services (includes Dag Hammerskjold Library Staff)

The Department of Conference Services provides language, stenographic, and publishing and documentation services for meetings held under UN auspices. Initially, most of the UN interpreters and translators in the Russian language section of this department were expatriate "White Russians" or their descendants. In 1962, however, the UN and the Soviet Union came to an agreement whereby all translators and interpreters in Russian must be trained at the Pedagogical Institute for Foreign Languages in Moscow. Since the mid-1960s, most of the people in the Russian language section have been citizens of the Soviet Union. The post of under secretary general in the Department has been occupied by an East European national since 1962.

As a gift of the Ford Foundation, the Dag Hammerskjold Library is used by the permanent missions' staffs and the Secretariat in the course of their daily work. It also contributes to the preparatory work of conferences by assembling data, answering specific questions, and preparing special bibliographies. The director of the library has been a Soviet citizen for many years.

11. Department of Political and Security Council Affairs

The Department of Political and Security Council Affairs is responsible for assisting the Secretary General in all relationships with the Security Council, and the General Assembly's First Main Committee, which deals primarily with arms-related matters.

According to Trygve Lie, who became Secretary General in 1946, the five big powers in the Security Council "agreed among themselves to ask me to appoint a national of each of them as an Assistant Secretary General." They also agreed that the top post in the political department should be held by a Soviet national. The department's Under Secretary General has always been a citizen of the Soviet Union. According to academic literature, however, Soviet dominance is nominal because the department is bypassed on matters of importance to the maintenance of international peace and security.

13. Department of International Economic and Social Affairs

The Department of International Economic and Social Affairs is the ECOSOC's Secretariat unit. Its responsibilities include: preparing various reports requested by the Council, drawing up the agenda, making proposals for internal organization, and scheduling meetings during Council sessions.

When the Council is in session, members of the Department serve as parliamentary advisers to the chairmen, keep tabs on the progress of the meetings, and make sure that documents become available on time and at the proper place. Following the session, the Department oversees the preparation of the Council's annual report to the General Assembly and implements those Council decisions specifically addressed to the Secretary General.

When the Secretary General is not able to address the Council at the opening of its plenary meetings, the Under Secretary General for the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs either reads the speech or delivers a personal statement. The Under Secretary General also exercises the right to intervene any time during the consideration of substantive issues to clarify misunderstandings and to facilitate operational agreements.

In terms of importance and manpower, UNOG is the principal UN office outside New York. Originally set up to serve as a meeting and service center for UN conferences, it has over the years become the residence for the following substantive divisions and organs of the Secretariat: the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator, United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, European Office of the United Nations Development Program, Committee on Disarmament, Center for Human Rights, and the Economic Commission for Europe.

Director General represents the Secretary General in relations with permanent missions to the UN and the specialized agencies located in Geneva, but does not have clearly defined authority over the substantive divisions and organs of the Secretariat in Geneva. Theoretically, the UN organizations in Geneva take orders from New York, but the distance and the lack of supervision from UNOG give them substantial independence and make them susceptible to becoming the preserve of a particular country or group of countries.

17. United Nations Office at Vienna

Although smaller than the office in Geneva, the United Nations Office in Vienna has much the same function as the office in Geneva and also has become the abode of several substantive divisions and organs of the Secretariat. The following bodies are located in Vienna: International Narcotics Control Board, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, United Nations Industrial Development Organization, UN Center for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, and the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy.

UNEP was created in 1972 to monitor significant changes in the environment (pollution levels in particular) and to encourage as well as coordinate sound environmental practices. It is a product of the UN Conference on the Human Environment (Stockholm, 1972). Organized along much the same lines as UNIDO and UNCTAD, UNEP's governing council reports to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council, and it is assisted by its own secretariat within the UN Secretariat. Along with providing support for the governing council, UNEP's secretariat also coordinates all programs concerned with the environment and administers a fund that partially finances the initiative.

19. Secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD)—Geneva

UNCTAD was founded in 1964 to restructure traditional patterns of trade to allow developing countries a greater role. It also facilitates the coordination of activities by the other institutions within the UN system in the field of international trade and economic development. UNCTAD is neither a specialized agency nor a special program under ECOSOC, but a quasi-independent organ of the General Assembly that reports to the Assembly through ECOSOC. It has its own secretariat and secretary general.

Confidential*20. Economic Commissions (Geneva, Bangkok, Santiago, Addis Ababa, Baghdad)

There are five regional economic commissions: the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA), Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), and the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA). They were established to foster economic activity in their respective regions and to improve the economic relations between the countries in their regions and other countries. The commissions report annually to the Secretary General and ECOSOC through their respective executive secretaries. Although their secretariats are formally part of the UN Secretariat, they tend to be independent as a result of resolutions, passed in the General Assembly and ECOSOC during the 1960s, aimed at decentralizing UN economic and social functions.

According to academic literature, ECE is the most technically advanced and sophisticated of the commissions. It operates through branch committees and deals with complex technological questions such as the steel committee, chemical industry committee, and the gas committee. In terms of membership and staff, Bloc representation in ECE is proportionately higher than in any other UN organ.

Until 1962, the USSR was the only Communist state represented on ESCAP—then called the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE). It tried but failed to gain some form of representation on the commission for North Korea, Vietnam, Mongolia, and China. However, when these states were admitted to the United Nations, except for North Korea, they automatically became members of ESCAP.

Unlike the commissions for Europe and the Pacific, neither the United States nor the Soviet Union is allowed to hold membership status in ECA. Both states were accorded observer status, which entitles them to attend sessions as nonvoting participants. Neither the Soviet Union nor any of the countries in Eastern Europe belong to or hold observer status in ECLA or ECWA.

21. Secretariat of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)—Vienna

UNIDO was founded in 1967 to promote and accelerate the industrialization of the developing world and coordinate all UN efforts toward this end. It is an organ of the General Assembly and functions as an "autonomous organization" within the UN. The principal policymaking body of UNIDO is a 45-member Industrial Development Board, which is elected every three years by the General Assembly. The board reports to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. It is assisted by its own secretariat within the UN Secretariat, which is headed by an executive director who is appointed by the Secretary General and confirmed by the General Assembly. UNIDO probably will become a specialized agency this year.

The WFC was founded in 1974 by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the World Food Conference (Rome, 1974). Established at a ministerial or plenipotentiary level, it is meant to promote and coordinate the political action necessary to carry out the General Assembly's resolutions concerning food. It monitors the world food situation, mobilizes support, and seeks to ensure coherence of policy efforts by governments and international agencies to solve world food problems. The WFC is serviced within the framework of the FAO as well as by its own secretariat. It reports to the General Assembly through ECOSOC, and its 36 members are elected by the General Assembly for three-year terms after nomination by ECOSOC.

Specialized Agencies*S-1. International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)— Vienna

The IAEA was founded in 1956 to foster, encourage, and give advice on the development of the peaceful use of atomic energy throughout the world. The agency also has responsibility for forming and implementing the safeguard provisions of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. Because of the changing energy situation, it also has been called upon to provide assistance in feasibility studies for nuclear power plants and to expand its work on the development of siting, safety, and reliability standards for nuclear power stations. Technically, the IAEA is not a specialized agency, but an independent intergovernmental organization under the aegis of the United Nations. It has 110 members. The Soviet Union joined in 1957.
